

have oppressed and persecuted the Sahrawis so that they have had to live in refugee camps in the harsh Sahara Desert for over 25 years. Their government's policy should also ensure that the Sahrawi people are guaranteed their rights and get their property returned.

WESTERN HEMISPHERE OIL SUPPLIES NOT NECESSARILY SECURE

(Mr. HALL of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I want to address the question of security of our oil supply. The political dynamic that resulted in the crippling Arab oil embargo Americans suffered throughout 1970s is not exactly the same today. Fuel sources today are much more diverse.

However, our oil supplies are still vulnerable. Recently, crude oil and refined product shipments in Venezuela were at a virtual standstill due to the off-again and on-again regime of Hugo Chavez.

Mexico's oil industry has come on strong in recent years with Mexico establishing itself as the second largest producer in the Western Hemisphere. But the state-owned oil company, Pemex, continues to struggle for lack of investment of capital.

Fortunately, the United States can look to Canada for supply. According to EIA, from January through November 2001, the United States imported more oil and refined products from Canada than any other country.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot take any foreign oil supply for granted. We must realistically turn to the development of new domestic sources of oil and gas reserves in the offshore, in the Rockies and in Alaska. We have the know-how and the resources to accomplish this. If not now, when?

WELFARE REAUTHORIZATION

(Mr. SMITH of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, in this November's election, there is going to be a lot of talk and debate about Social Security. As a person that has worked for the last 9 years on the Social Security problems; and how we achieve the best possible solution to make sure that we keep this important program, and having served in the last session as chairman of the bipartisan Task Force on Social Security, I would like to make a couple of suggestions.

One is that we do not try to scare people in an effort to achieve some kind of political advantage, but rather that we talk about the real problem of Social Security; we talk about the real cost of doing nothing. Right now we have a $9 trillion unfunded mandate. It needs to be rationally discussed; we need to face up to the challenge. It is a serious problem.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the longer we put off a solution, the more drastic that solution. Let us move ahead with real discussion and debate, not demagoguery.

WELFARE REFORM REQUIRES COMPREHENSIVE SOLUTION

(Mr. NADLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, today I would like to ask my colleagues just one question. As we consider reauthorizing our Nation's welfare program, what do we want to accomplish, a temporary fix, or a comprehensive solution to poverty?

If we truly want a comprehensive solution, we would allow TANF recipients to count education as a work activity so that they can move into living-wage jobs and not end up back on TANF 6 months after they leave. If we want a comprehensive solution, we would invest in quality child care so parents could go to work to ensure their children will be safe in a nurturing environment that is preparing them for success in school and beyond. If we want a comprehensive solution, we would recognize the typical immigrant worker pays $80,000 more in taxes than they receive in government benefits over a lifetime, and we would restore the safety net for them.

We would do all of this if we wanted a comprehensive solution.

But the Republican proposal does not embody this common sense. What is in their bills is a program that sets low-income people up for failure. Dead-end workfare jobs with no opportunity to pursue further education and escape is a vicious cycle of poverty.

I challenge my colleagues to make good their election year pledges to help America's working families and make these improvements in TANF this year.

HONORING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF MARGE SCHOLLAERT

(Mr. SHUSTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the achievements of Marge Schollaert, a constituent who resides in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania. Recently, Marge was named the School Counselor of the Year for the middle and junior high level of the Pennsylvania School Counselors Association. Of the nearly 4,000 school counselors in the State of Pennsylvania, only four are honored as counselors of the year.

Marge Schollaert was recognized by her peers for her commitment to the Chambersburg area middle school and its students. Marge has been a key component in the development of students at Chambersburg Middle School. Among her many accomplishments, Marge took the lead in forming Peer Helpers, a program to facilitate the difficult process for students starting in a new school.

Of the 23 years she has served as a school counselor, 18 of those years have been spent working with the students of Chambersburg Area Middle School.

I congratulate Marge Schollaert on her Counselor of the Year award, and I applaud her steadfast dedication to her profession and her hard work for the students of Chambersburg.

TANF REAUTHORIZATION

(Mr. DAVIS of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, for those who think welfare reform is working well because caseloads have decreased, I ask them to come with me through low-income neighborhoods across the country. Walk into the many ghettos and barrios in distressed areas and tell those individuals that welfare reform is working.

During the caseload plunge, many recipients moved laterally in the employment sector from one low-income, low-wage job to another one.

In order to do real welfare reform, we must put hope in the new welfare bill. We must put in job training, education, and transitional movement. We must have a strong fatherhood initiative. Many of the individuals are parents of children. They are incarcerated, in jail, in the penitentiaries. If there is to be hope, we must make welfare reform a reality. If there is no work, there is no hope, and there is no welfare to work.

INS REFORM

(Mr. SULLIVAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to voice my support for the immigration reform bill before the House this week. I commend the Committee on the Judiciary and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the chairman of that committee, and the House Republican leadership for this legislation, the Immigration Reform and Accountability Act.

It is absolutely critical that we completely restructure the INS, one of the most inefficient government agencies. The continual ineptitude was only brought to the public knowledge by the events of September 11. I believe the final straw was March 11 when two of the terrorist hijackers received paperwork showing that their student visas had been approved. These visa approvals came well after the two would-be hijackers had completed their training course.
